Gratitude

What do Rabbits, and Astronauts, Penguins and Corny Dogs have in common? Not much, except on Halloween. We have just finished the Halloween season. Actually, it started out as the eve before All Saints Day. If you ask a child about All Saints Day, they will be totally baffled. There is no candy, there is no costume, there is no adrenaline rush. It's hard to compete, especially if they do not know the stories of faith from the saints in our lives. The more outrageous the Halloween holiday becomes, the harder it is to compete. We are literally creating a monster. The Frankenstein Principle says, "You have to live with the monsters you create." Here's what I'm thinking.... We have created some monstrous idols. They have turned into something we didn't intend. The law of unintended consequences has kept us from our true identity. We've disguised our priorities and true identities and we've forgotten (or don't remember how) to take our disguises off! And perhaps this is what our kids see.

There is a time for dressing up and overindulging on candy and faking the scariest moments possible and celebrating our deliverance from scarier times. But there is also a time for dressing down, and disciplining our appetites, and realizing the really scariest times in our lives have to do with being absent from God. Here's what I've observed: we go way overboard on worldly distractions, and we don't balance that out with the things that will give us hope, peace, long-lasting joy and a sense of our true purpose and identity -- which is to do the will of God and give God heart-felt praise, glory, service, and thanks for the image of God within us. We are called to unmask our human nature so that Christ's light may shine! It breaks my heart that the number of people who attended haunted houses this Halloween season completely overwhelms the number of people who attended church. People paid every time they went to the haunted house and that money far surpasses what was given on any given Sunday in October. Now that's scary!!! It's time to find your home. Is it a haunted house or God's house? Come find your true identity! This is the Thanksgiving season and the time for putting on your Thanksgiving garb – an attitude of gratitude! Let the saints go marching in!

Lord, as you will; and as you know have mercy!

Blessings! Pastor Liz
